Faculty Book Collection • 2020

The Stanley C. and Selma D. Hollander Faculty Book Collection was established by the MSU Libraries in 1998 to recognize and honor the scholarly work of MSU faculty members who have written, edited, or translated a book or musical score; contributed to a multimedia work; or participated in a professionally recorded musical performance.

Materials for the Stanley C. and Selma D. Hollander Faculty Book Collection are purchased, in part, with funds from the Robert S. and Harriett R. Spira Library Endowment and the Stanley C. and Selma D. Hollander Faculty Book Collection Endowment.

Partners in Research, Teaching, and Learning

It is both an honor and a privilege to recognize the faculty of Michigan State University through the Faculty Book Collection and its annual celebration. It is also gratifying to present the work of our colleagues within the context of a world-class research library collection developed over the course of the history of the first land-grant university in the United States.

The Libraries are at the center of academic life at MSU, providing expertise, collections, and infrastructure for discovery and creation. This year as we celebrate research conducted here and throughout the world for books collected here and throughout the world, we also celebrate the expanding role the MSU Libraries play in the creation of our collections. In addition to helping others find and analyze resources, our librarians are co-authoring with faculty colleagues or on research teams, and we're actively engaged in changes related to scholarly communication.

Trends in scholarly communication impact the resources we add to our collections (from e-books to online journals to data sets) and they impact our faculty partners.

Many of the changes reflect intended and unintended consequences of the larger digital revolution. Some of the trends include a push for open access publishing, a growing demand for data sets, an increased demand for measurements that gauge the impact of scholarly publications, and new mandates from grant funders. Researchers and authors face new choices about their own intellectual property rights, the terms of publisher contracts, and funding sources for article processing charges. They also face other issues: the use and abuse of publishing metrics, emerging formats and venues, and the risk from so-called predatory publishers. In addressing these opportunities, challenges, and changes, library staff aim to educate the campus community and work as partners with MSU faculty, researchers, and students.

Our work as partners means that we strive, always, to facilitate connections that support research, teaching, and learning. We place users at the forefront of our work, and that means we also place access to information and spaces at the forefront of our work. Our commitment to open educational resources (OER) reflects this. Improving access to required learning materials makes college more affordable and more equitable, and we are encouraging (and empowering) faculty to implement OER in courses.

Investing in partnerships means investing in collaborative work, and a fine (and recent) example of this is MESH, our collaborative research and development unit we established with the College of Arts and Letters. With MESH, we're advancing digital work in support of scholarly communications. Participants in MESH are working to bring Humanities Commons to MSU, develop an application to support collaborative peer review processes, and expand campus offerings in support of public scholarship.

In Special Collections, we're working to expand popular culture, comic book, and radicalism collections. Recently, we acquired the Melissa and Jack Bodnar Collection of Michigan Rock History. This collection includes more than 25,000 pieces related to the counterculture movement of the late 1960s. Highlights of the collection include original lithographs created by Carl Lundgren and Gary Grimshaw, photographs, recordings, handbills, and complete runs of underground newspapers from Detroit, Ann Arbor, Chicago, and San Francisco.

Other services and collections are growing, too. Staff in our Publishing Services unit continue to work with more and more people, and we anticipate this unit will expand to include digital publishing as we work to support OER. Our Digital Scholarship Lab continues to grow, and increasing numbers of faculty and students are using the immersive space of our 360 Room to deepen their understanding of and appreciation for spaces and places throughout our world.

It is a true honor to add new books authored by MSU faculty to our collections, and it is a pleasure to celebrate these collections.

We value the contributions our faculty partners make to our Libraries, and we will work, always, to provide the expertise our partners need. Let us all celebrate and foster a culture of experimentation and growth and a spirit of robust curiosity.
